A MESSAGE TO CONGRESS

FIRST MESSAGE EVER CABLED BY A PRESIDENT.

The Many Important War and Readjustment Problems Considered and Suggestions Given.

Congress was called into extraordinary session on Monday, May 19, by President Wilson, and the following message was read at the opening session:

Gentlemen of the Congress: I deeply regret my inability to be present at the opening of the extraordinary session of the Congress. It still seems to be my duty to take part in the counsels of the peace conference and contribute what I can to the solution of the innumerable questions to whose settlement it has had to address itself. For they are questions which affect the peace of the whole world and from them, therefore, the United States cannot stand apart.

I deemed it my duty to call the Congress together at this time because it was not wise to postpone longer the provisions which must be made for the support of the Government. Many of the appropriations which are absolutely necessary for the maintenance of the Government and the fulfillment of its varied obligations for the fiscal year 1919-1920 have not yet been made; the end of the present fiscal year is at hand; and action upon these appropriations can no longer be prudently delayed. It is necessary, therefore, that I should immediately call your attention to this critical need. It is hardly necessary for me to urge that it may receive your prompt attention.

I shall take the liberty of addressing you on my return on the subjects which have most engrossed our attention and the attention of the world during these last anxious months, since the armistice of last November was signed, the international settlements which must form the subject matter of the present treaty of peace and of our national action in the immediate future. It would be premature to discuss them or to express a judgment about them before they are brought to their complete formulation by the agreements which are now being sought at the table of the conference. I shall hope to lay them before you in their many aspects so soon as arrangements have been reached.

I hesitate to venture any opinion or press any recommendation with regard to domestic legislation while absent from the United States and out of daily touch with intimate sources of information and counsel. I am conscious that I need, after so long an absence from Washington, to seek the advice of those who have remained in constant contact with domestic problems and who have known them close at hand from day to day; and I trust that it will very soon be possible for me to do so. But there are several questions pressing for consideration to which I feel that I may and, indeed, must, even now direct your attention, if only in general terms. In speaking of them I shall, I dare say, be doing little more than speak your own thoughts. I hope that I shall speak your own judgment also.

Wants Labor Legislation.

The question which stands at the front of all others in every country amidst the present great awakening is the question of labor; and perhaps I can speak of it with as great advantage while engrossed in the consideration of interests which affect all countries alike as I could at home and amidst the interests which naturally most affect my thought, because they are the interests of our own people.

By the questions of labor I do not mean the question of efficient industrial production, the question of how labor is to be obtained and made effective in the great process of sustaining populations and winning success amidst commercial and industrial rivalries. I mean that much greater and more vital question, how are the men and women who do the daily labor of the world to obtain progressive improvement in the conditions of their labor, to be made happier, and to be served better by the communities and the industries which their labor sustains and advances? How are they to be given their right advantage as citizens and human beings?

We cannot go any further in our present direction. We have already gone too far. We cannot live our right life as a nation or achieve our proper success as an industrial community if capital and labor are to continue to be antagonistic instead of being partners; if they are to continue to distrust one another and contrive how they can get the better of one another, or what perhaps amounts to the same thing, calculate by what form and degree of coercion they can manage to extort on the one hand work enough to make enterprise profitable, on the other justice and fair treatment enough to make life tolerable. That bad road has turned out to be a blind alley. It is no thoroughfare to real prosperity. We must find another, leading in another direction and to a very different destination. It must lead not merely to accommodation but also to a genuine co-operation and partnership based upon a real community

Stranger Takes His Life.

W. H. Hardeson, a stranger, committed suicide Tuesday night on the Carlisle road north of town near the forks of the road at the old Blocher place. The body was found Wednesday morning by Edward Cassatt as he went to work, lying on the bank of a stream at that point. The deed was done during the night as the man had been dead some hours when found. When the body was searched, the name of W. H. Hardeson was found on underclothing. He had 13 cents in his pockets, a penknife, and a small gold chain across his vest. He was well dressed and had a raincoat on. After the water in the little run had gone down a white handled razor was found in the stream, with which he had cut the jugular vein and bled to death. Labels on his coat and hat indicate that he was from Jacksonville, Florida, and the authorities of that city have been communicated with. The man is unknown here.

Nothing our salesmen can say about the Willys-Knight motor car can be as convincing as the statements of Willys-Knight owners. The man who had driven a Willys-Knight car thousands of miles becomes so enthusiastic over the sleeve-valve motor that he is rarely ever content until he prevails upon his friends to profit by his experience. The Willys-Knight sleeve-valve motor is so ungrudging and unflagging in its performance that it has come to be known as the motor that always runs. "AVERAGE MAN" SCORES ONE Finds Joy in Reminding Better Half That She Is Also Victim of New Tax.

The average family has been having heart to heart talks for months on how expenditures may be cut down and something of the average salary put in the bank for the annual vacation. The average man has been troubled, too, as he puffed the long, black cigar—not financially troubled, but the result of a little worrying that some day the average woman was going to get personal about their saving plan. It came the other night.

"I see, dear," she began, her sweetness adding to his growing suspicion, "that the state is about to put another tax on cigars. They'll go up some more. You know I wouldn't suggest anything that would interfere with your pleasure, but don't you think cigars are getting too much of a luxury when we are trying to save?"

The average man grunted. It gained time; it prevented sudden complications. He had had an answer ready for weeks for this inevitable question, but reasoning fled just then. He had the paper she had already read. He would find out about this tax before he answered.

And then—ain't it a grand and glorious feeling?

"Very well, my dear," he said, trying to keep the neighbors from hearing the exultation in his tone. "This tax will give us both a chance to sacrifice. I'll quit my cigars if you'll give up powdering your face. You see, Sweet, the tax is on cosmetics, too."

And the average man grinned victoriously behind the newspaper.

"WHAT MIGHT HAVE BEEN"

If Paul Revere Had Only Had a Telephone Available in the Days of 'Seventy-five.

Somebody in the New England telephone organization has been figuring out how easily Paul Revere could have accomplished all the purposes of his famous ride on the "eighteenth of April, in 'seventy-five," if he only had had telephone facilities like those available today. As the telephone man says, Revere would have been able to save himself a lot of hard riding. He could have called Concord from a public station in the North end, or Charlestown either, and had his friends of the committee of public safety on the line within eight minutes, if the operators took as much time then as they do now. And how much easier it would have been to get the powder buried and the gun carriages done away with if the Concord folk had had their warning eight minutes after the bell arch of the Old North steeple. Only, if there had been telephones, there would have been no lanterns. They would have used the 'phone for the whole thing. And then of course a famous poem would never have been written.—Christian Science Monitor.

Glenn Curtiss Loved Mechanics.
Glenn Hammond Curtiss, one-time messenger in Rochester, N. Y., now "king of the air," and worth millions, like most boys, loved things mechanical. His day dreams and his dreams at night were of mechanical contrivances that moved about on wheels, and the inventions of Jules Verne. From motorcycles to airplanes proved a short step. Curtiss, who had been improving on his motorcycle engine, developed it so it could be used in dirigible balloons. In 1909 he went to Reims and easily defeated the crack foreign flyers, becoming the first international champion of the air. In 1910 he flew from Albany to New York, 150 miles. Having won his laurels in the air, he took up the actual work of building planes. Today there is scarcely any airplane used in the United States or Europe on which Curtiss does not draw a royalty.

Legitimate Prey.
One day a little old woman appeared at the parsonage to be married to an old man. The woman was bent over so much one had to stoop to look into her face. The bridegroom was deaf as a post.

All the time the pastor was making out the necessary papers the woman talked and muttered to herself, saying: "I don't know why that stingy old man wants to get married. He doesn't want to pay a cook, that's all. Make him pay well, parson. He's worth it. He's got a farm and lots of money. He's a mean, stingy, old man and he's deaf and can't hear what I say. Charge him good, brother."

The ceremony over, the man paid the customary $5, with the bride still jawing, he uttered oblivions of it all.

New Golf Clubs.
Of special interest to golf players is a club made with a steel instead of a hickory shaft, shown in Popular Mechanics magazine, which it is claimed, possesses all the flexibility of the wooden shaft and has additional desirable features. The steel shaft is hollow, tapers toward the lower end, and is much smaller in diameter than one of hickory. This is said to give the player additional driving power, because of reduced friction when the club is swung through the air.

Musical Advice.
"It's a pity you never took music lessons," said Mr. Rafferty.
"So I could sing more?" inquired Mr. Dolan.
"No. A study of music might have improved your taste so that you'd quit trying!"

HAD A RECORD APPETITE

Child of Eight Devours Entire Raw Cod, Two Pounds of Candles and Several of Butter.

"Eccentricities of Diet and Their Effect on the Digestion" was the subject of a lecture delivered at the Institute of Hygiene by Dr. Saltan Fenwick. The physician mentioned people who can never eat enough; who have an insatiable hunger. In appearance they are lean, feeble, ill-favored, and they have carnivorous appetites. However much they eat they are none the better for it.

One little girl of eight had a special keeper to prevent her from eating the household goods. She would cheerfully devour seven times as much as any other member of the family, and escaping from her attendant one day for a few minutes enjoyed a meal beginning with an entire raw cod, two pounds of kitchen candles and several pounds of butter. She was fortunately found before she got further than these hors d'oeuvres.

A girl was locked in a little walled garden for two or three hours. During that time she ate every leaf she could lay hands on, most of the small twigs on shrubs and was discovered in the act of gnawing a bough.

One boy ate the whole of his clothing. A young woman invaded a dairy, ate 29 unboiled eggs, six pounds of butter five loaves, and drank three pints of milk and two bottles of wine; after which, providentially for the dairy keeper, she fell asleep.—London Express.

INDIAN CITIES VERY ENGLISH

In Architecture and Many Other Ways They Are Copies of Those in the Old Land.

The great presidency towns, Calcutta, Bombay, Madras, are European cities planted on Indian soil. All the prominent buildings are European, though in some of the more recent ones an endeavor has been made to adopt what is known as the "Indo-Saracenic" style of architecture. For the rest the streets are called by English names, generally the names of bygone viceroys and governors, or of the soldiers who conquered the land and quelled the mutiny—heroes whose effigies meet you at every turn. The shops are English shops, where English or Eurasian assistants traffic in English goods. English carriages and motors bowl along the macadamized or tarred roads of old England. On every hand there is evidence of the instinctive effort to reproduce, as nearly as the climate will permit, English conditions of life. In Bombay, indeed, the merchant princes are no longer Europeans but Hindus and Parsis. Theirs are the most sumptuous palaces on Malabar hill; theirs the most swaggering motors on the Queen's road and the Apollo Bunder. In Calcutta, though commercial competition is less keen, the great Bengali land owner is a prominent and important personage. But few, indeed, are the points of contact between the Asian town and the European city which has been superimposed upon it.—India and the Future, by William Archer.

Greatest Efficiency Temperature.
Human beings work at the highest point of efficiency in an average temperature of 60 to 65 degrees Fahrenheit, according to Ellsworth Huntington, who publishes in the Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences a mass of statistics from which he makes this deduction.

The death rate is lowest in the spring and autumn, both in Europe and America, when the temperature averages 64 or 65.

In many factories all the way from Connecticut to Florida it was found that the maximum of work was produced when the temperature in the open air ranged around 62 or 63.

The muscular force exerted by school children and working men, measured with the dynamometer every day in all seasons of the year, was greatest when the thermometer was between 60 and 65 Fahrenheit.

Bird in Need Found Friend.

A North side resident saw a robin fluttering around in his back yard with what he thought was a broken wing. Realizing that the cats would soon make short work of him, he caught the robin, intending to get it out of harm's way. On investigation he found that instead of a broken wing it had become entangled in a piece of string a yard or two long.

How it had done this was a mystery, unless it had been getting the string for a nest. It was wrapped around the bird's neck three or four times, around one wing several times, and its feet were tied as securely as though the hand of man had done it. A few minutes' work with the scissors soon freed the bird, and it took wing, singing as it went.—Indianapolis News.

New Member Scored.

Some of the occupants of the opposition benches in the new house of commons may not be quite conversant with all the niceties of parliamentary procedure, but they are quite capable, apparently, of holding their own all the same. Thus the other day the honorable member for Silvertown, warning to his argument, had just begun, "I want you gentlemen . . .," when loud cries of "order" served as a reminder that he was addressing "the house." Mr. Jack Jones' apology was swift and to the point. "I am sorry," he said, "I have made a mistake in calling you gentlemen."—Christian Science Monitor.

AGENT GAVE IT UP

Nothing for Him to Do but Hand Out Ticket.

Now He Makes Plaintive Appeal for Rule by Which He Can Tell a Minister From Ordinary Run of Mankind.

"Sky pilots! Whee-ew!" whistled the ticket agent of a Missouri town the other day, so the story goes. "Well, it seems to me there are just ten times as many as there used to be in this neck of the woods, and I tell you some of the guys who come up here to this window sayin' they're ministers and asking for half-fare tickets look more like ballyhoo men at a street fair or circus than sky pilots."

"The trouble is when a fellow comes up here to the window and says 'I'm a preacher,' there ain't any rules laid down for me to go by to tell him from a professional crook, or moll buzzer, or a right reverend, and so I have to hand out the ticket."

"The other night I was talking to my wife about it, and we hit on a scheme, and when I went down to work next morning I had the family Bible tucked under my arm, and when a sporty-looking old chap, puffing a cigarette, with a plaid suit and a necktie so loud it was screaming at you, came up to the window, and says 'minister's ticket to Kansas City, please,' I said respectful like:

"Please excuse me, sir, but will you please tell me who wrote the second book of St. Paul's Epistle to the Galatians?"

"He smiled at me friendly, and said pretty quick, 'Why Paul, of course. Now get busy with a ticket!'"

"Nope," said I, just as cold as you please, looking him hard in the eyes. "You're dead wrong there. Paul didn't do any such thing, and nobody else ever wrote a second book to those Galatians, for there ain't any such book, and I thought I had finished him."

"But, mind you, he just sort of looked at me sad-like for a minute like he felt sorry for me, and then he reared back and said in a voice just like he was praying: 'Sir, I am a minister of the holy gospel, whether or not this finite thing called mind tricks me in reference to the number of books written by the blessed saint, Paul. I teach the philosophy of rational thought so as to co-ordinate with the elucidation of internal forces upon the outward or extraneous matter which operate in opposition to the complete domination of the purely physical to the intellectual—the soul, some call it—and that the elevation of the spiritual retards the development of disease and error on this terrestrial planet on which we live and move and have our being.'"

"I looked at him a minute, and then I said out loud, 'Well I be dogged! For I was thinking all the time to myself how a ten-dollar-a-week ticket man was ever going to get wise to a line of talk like that even with a Bible in his hand. And I handed out the ticket.'—Kansas City Star.

Quaint Island.

Elmley, one of England's oddest little islands, though only 48 miles from London, is a parish where roads, shops, lamps, telephones, motor cars, public houses and postoffices are unknown. The island, which lies off the Isle of Sheppey, Kent, has an area of about 2,000 acres, and is the property of Oxford university. The inhabitants are mostly shepherds of large flocks of sheep. The oldest man of the village is in his seventieth year. He has yet to see a motor car. The school and church are the two chief landmarks on the island. The reason they were built in such a sparsely populated spot is that in winter it is almost impossible to leave the island, as the ferry which runs to and from the island is dangerous.

A novel method of obtaining the services of the ferryman, who lives opposite to the island, is the opening of the white door of a hut facing the shore. At night a lighted candle held aloft serves the purpose of the open door.

Stonewall's Plan.

As an American troopship pulled away from a New York dock on its journey to France, Stonewall Jackson and Welcome Brown hung over the forward rail and looked with solemn faces down into the choppy waters of the Atlantic.

"What you'll get me to do, Stonewall, if one of dem powerful mean torpedoes smash into dis here boat?" Stonewall remained silent for a minute, then he turned a sober face toward his brother in sorrow.

"What I going to do? Listen, Welcome, my ole manning done told me dat dere nadder wuz but one man dat ober walked on de water an' got away wid it—but of one ob dem chasers ever smash into dis boat—say, Welcome, Ah'm goin' to be de second one."—John E. Storgins, U. S. N., in Judge.

Rats Cause Losses.

Losses from rats in cities are enormous. In 1908 the biological survey made a careful study of rat infestations in two cities, Washington and Baltimore, with the result that actual losses of produce and other property amounting annually to $400,000 and $700,000 respectively, were revealed. These sums are nearly in ratio to the populations. The Woman's Municipal league of Boston recently announced that losses from rats in that city amounted to $1,750,000 each year. Losses in Pittsburgh, Pa., have been estimated at over $1,000,000 a year.

KNEW NOTHING ABOUT TOYS

Little Ones of Palestine Grew Up Without Seeing a Doll Until Armenians Brought Some.

Ever since the outbreak of the war, the children of Palestine have been without toys, and a whole generation is growing up that has not even "mothered" a doll. The miseries that have all but overwhelmed the city of Jerusalem have robbed even the boys of any inclination to play, except now and then a pathetic imitation of football as indulged in by the British "Tommys" of General Allenby's liberating army. So writes Miss Libby Oppenheim, a New York girl, who is the secretary of the American Zionist medical unit which is now operating in Palestine.

Miss Oppenheim was charged with the task of distributing a contribution of toys which accompanied one of the clothes shipments sent recently to the Holy Land by the Palestine supplies department of the Zionist organization of America. The toys were distributed to the kindergartens, the schools, the orphanages and to the two children's hospitals in Jerusalem and Jaffa.

Miss Oppenheim personally took some of the toys to the girls' orphanage, and she describes the scene that transpired. "We first explained the toys to Mrs. S.—the head of the orphanage and to her assistant, Mrs. S.—then assembled the children in one room and told them to cover their eyes, as she had a surprise for them."

"Then she and her assistant brought in a few toys at a time and placed them on a table. The children's patience could not last until all the toys were brought in, but when, through the corners of their eyes, they saw a few of the toys they were almost beside themselves with joy."

"One little minx of six, whose patience had got out of bounds, asked, very pertinently: 'But when do we get them?' The children in one hospital in Jerusalem and Tel Aviv were also made happy by this fine donation of toys."

QUEER MYTH ABOUT WILSON

Belief in Austria That President of the United States Is Really Crown Prince Rudolph.

According to the Vienna Journal, a serious newspaper, the rural population of large districts of the provinces of Lower Austria and Styria never believed in the death of Crown Prince Rudolph of Austria, who was assassinated in the castle of Mervelfing, near Baden, together with Countess Vevers in 1889.

The people refused to accept this official statement, and their suspicion was nourished at the time by the fact that the coffin of the crown prince at the funeral was extremely small, while the crown prince himself was a powerful man.

The story went that the crown prince had really not been murdered at all, but that he had fled across the big pond.

Ever since the war there is a growing belief among the rural population that the crown prince, who, as will be remembered, was addicted to scientific researches, is identical with Prof. Woodrow Wilson, president of the United States of America.

The remarkable thing is that there is an evident optimism as the future of Austria connected with the legend, for the people say it is plain that Wilson being Crown Prince Rudolph, will not let his beloved Austria perish.

Cotton Gin for Zululand.

The first cotton-ginning plant in Zululand, writes Vice Consul Charles J. Pizar from Cape Town, recently commenced operations at Amatitulu, after almost a year's preparatory work. The capacity of the American gin installed is between 1,500 and 1,600 pounds of lint for an eight-hour day, which represents 2½ tons of seed cotton. The installation of this ginning plant is looked upon as one of far-reaching importance for the cotton growers in Zululand, and it is believed that cotton growing there, which has been receiving special attention from government experts, will undergo a very rapid development in the near future.

Animals Are Tourists.

As a refuge from inclement weather California has long been the winter playground for thousands, but it is only recently that cattle and sheep have joined the tourist ranks, according to Popular Mechanics magazine. Naturally this winter resorting of common range stock is not specially attractive, but is inspired by good business motives. California pastures afford more economical winter feed, and the sheep go through the breeding season with far less loss. With all the devices of tents and lambing wagons had weather often takes half the increase in lambs. So change of climate is really an economical measure, with the recent prices for early lambs.

Guardian of the Light.

Miss Winifred Holt is well named "the angel of the blind." She is head of the Lighthouse, a home for the blind in New York city, where those who cannot see are taught useful work. Several years ago she went to France to work for the benefit of the men blinded in the war. She established the Phare, French for "lighthouse," similar to the New York home in purpose, and has taught over three hundred men to support themselves without sight. For some time she worked in the first trenches on the Somme.

HAPPENED IN THE STONE AGE

Beautiful Love Story of How Cave Man Showed His Great Devotion for His Mate.

Glub, the cave man, hurried home through the early dawn. Slung from his shoulder were three large stones, and on his face was an anxious grin. At the door of the cave stood Bla, the cave woman, a scowl of wrath in her face, and a large, knotty club in her hand.

Glub gulped when he saw her, and hastily set the stones on the ground. Grinning sheepishly, he approached and struck her affectionately on the side of the jaw, following the blow with a tug at her black hair. But these blandishments were all lost on Bla, the stony-hearted, who fixed him in the eye with the largest knot on the club.

"Have a heart, sweetie"—or words to that effect—beggared Glub. At the sound of his voice, Bla broke into a prehistoric snuffle and removed the club from her mate's eye.

"Where have you been?" she sniffed. "I'll bet I know. I'll bet you've been over with those nasty, lowdown tree dwellers rolling bones till all hours, with your wife and children waiting for you and thinking you had been run over by a glacier, and the best ichthyosaurus stew you ever saw going to waste. O! Boo! Hoo!"

Breaking into loud, paleolithic sobs, Bla once more brought the club to bear upon her spouse's pithecanthropic nape. Glub was gripped and her reproaches made him feel guilty, so he knocked her down apologetically and confessed that she was right. He had been rolling bones with Sweek, the tree dweller.

"Yes," howled Bla. "I know it. I knew you were rolling bones. A fine thing for a man with a family to gamble away all his good shells and stones and even skins, when the children have hardly a whole fig leaf to their names, and the meat is so low that unless you score up a dinosaur this very day we shall starve. Fine goings on for a man with a family that needs to be saving his strength to go out and get meat for them and fiddle and skins to keep them warm!"

Glub was repentant. "Bla," he said, "I know it was wrong to gamble—very, very wrong—but see what I won from Sweek, the tree dweller. See the three hollow stones filled with dinosaur meat and Adam's apples. What! What do you think of that, Glub?"

Bla, to the surprise of her joy, flung the club into the cave, and flung herself upon Glub's neck, chuckling like a pig.

"Ah, my Glub!" she cried. "Come into the cave and have breakfast!"

Observed Father's Wish.

Thackeray's daughter, Lady Ritchie, the widow of Sir Richmond Ritchie, died recently at the age of eighty-two.

She had endeared herself to a wide public by her delightful reminiscences of her father and of the other famous Victorians among whom her early life was spent.

If as a novelist she achieved as popular success she was incomparable in relating anecdotes of the sort that illuminate, about the many remarkable men and women whom she had known intimately. It is much to be regretted that, in obedience to Thackeray's dying wish, she was precluded from writing her father's "Life."

Ritchie's "Thackeray" would have ranked with Lockhart's "Scott." Lady Ritchie's charming introductions to the biographical edition of "Thackeray" tantalize without satisfying his devotees. The reader wants more.—Living Age.

Recording Tree Growth.

Botanists of the Carnegie Institution keep an interesting record of the growth of tree trunks, with their daily and seasonal changes of shape, by means of a new apparatus called the "dendrograph." It has two forms, each using as a supporting belt a series of wooden blocks hinged together and fastened around the tree. In one form of the instrument, plungers, supporting an encircling wire at their outer ends, touch the trunk at selected points, and any movement of a plunger is transmitted by the wire to a recording pen on a revolving cylinder. In the other form, a yoke carrying four contacts surrounds the tree, the variation in the distances between the contacts caused by any change in the tree's girth being indicated on the recording drum.

Her Offering.

The elder sister had married a grocer and was well pleased with her choice. But not so her eighteen-year-old sister. She was taking great pains to impress the family with her ambitions for a husband. "He'll have to be a college graduate, a successful man in some big business and very handsome," she ended.

The elder sister smiled placidly. "And what charms," she asked blandly, "have you to offer for all these demands?"—Indianapolis News.

In the Days of the Bustle.

I was making a new dress for myself. It was a good many years ago, in the days when we wore bustles. The bustle which I wore was a home-made, crude affair. When fitting the dress, I had put on the bustle in order to get the proper hang to the skirt. So, to save time, I tied the bustle around outside of my house dress, and then tried on the new skirt.

During the morning I found it necessary to go to the store, and while waiting in the crowded grocery for my parcels, a friend, came up to me and said: to the amusement of the bystanders: "Why, Lillie, what have you tied around your waist?"

I found I had forgotten to take the bustle off, and had worn it on the outside of my house dress all the way to the store.—Exchange.

Think This Over

The investment of Funds and care of these investments are always difficult problems for the average individual.

Why not create a trust which can provide for the payment of income to you during life and designate the disposition of property after your death. Or which may be so drawn that in case of need through illness or unexpected misfortune the principal may be drawn on for that purpose.

In this way the aged are relieved of the care and investment of funds, which is always a difficult matter for persons who are not physically strong.

The laws of Pennsylvania guard well funds placed in the hands of Trust Companies of the state.

THE CITIZEN'S TRUST COMPANY OF GETTYSBURG stands ready to assume these cares and responsibilities for you.

of interest and participation in con-

Sees Need for Reorganization.

There is now in fact a real community of interest between capital and labor, but it has never been made evident in action. It can be made operative and manifest only in a new organization of industry. The genius of our business men and the sound practical sense of our workers can certainly work such a partnership out when once they realize exactly what it is that they seek and sincerely adopt a common purpose with regard to it.

Labor legislation lies, of course, chiefly with the States; but the new spirit and method of organization which must be effected are not to be brought about by legislation so much as by the common counsel and voluntary co-operation of capitalist, manager, and workman. Legislation can go only a very little way in commanding what shall be done. The organization of industry is a matter of corporate and individual initiative and of practical business arrangement. Those who really desire a new relationship between capital and labor can readily find a way to bring it about; and perhaps Federal legislation can help more than State legislation could.

The object of all reform in this essential matter must be the genuine democratization of industry, based upon a full recognition of the right of those who work, in whatever rank, to participate in some organic way in every decision which directly affects their welfare or the part they are to play in industry. Some positive legislation is practicable.

The Congress has already shown the way to one reform which should be world wide, by establishing the eight-hour day as the standard day in every field of labor over which it can exercise control. It has sought to find the way to prevent child labor, and will, I hope and believe, presently find it. It has served the whole country by leading the way in developing the means of preserving and safeguarding life and health in dangerous industries. It can now lead in the difficult task of giving a new form and spirit to industrial organization by co-ordinating the several agencies of conciliation and adjustment which have been brought into existence by the difficulties and mistaken policies of the present management of industry, and by setting up and developing new Federal agencies of advice and information which may serve as a clearing house for the best experiments, and the best thought on this great matter, upon which every thinking man must be aware that the future development of society directly depends.

Agencies of international counsel and suggestion are presently to be created in connection with the League of Nations in this very field; but it is national action and the enlightened policy of individuals, corporations and societies within each nation that must bring about the actual reforms. The members of the committees on labor in the two houses will hardly need suggestions from me as to what means they shall seek to make the Federal Government the agent of the whole nation in pointing out and, if need be, guiding the process of reorganization and reform.

Wants Jobs for Returned Soldiers.

I am sure that it is not necessary for me to remind you that there is one immediate and very practical question of labor that we should meet in the most liberal spirit. We must see to it that our returning soldiers are assisted in every practical way to find the places for which they are fitted in the daily work of the country. This can be done by developing and maintaining upon an adequate scale the admirable organization created by the Department of Labor for placing men seeking work; and it can also be done, in at least one very great field, by creating new opportunities for individual enterprise.

The Secretary of the Interior has pointed out the way by which returning soldiers may be helped to find and take up land in the hitherto undeveloped regions of the country, which the Federal Government has already prepared or can readily prepare for cultivation, and also on many of the cut over or neglected areas which lie within the limits of the older States; and I once more take the liberty of recommending very urgently that his plans shall receive the immediate support of the Congress.

Peculiar and very stimulating conditions await our commerce and industrial enterprise in the immediate future. Unusual opportunities will presently present themselves to our merchants and producers in foreign markets, and large fields for profitable investment will be opened to our free capital. But it is not only of that that I am thinking; it is not chiefly of that that I am thinking.

Many great industries prostrated by the war wait to be rehabilitated, in many parts of the world where what will be lacking is not brains or willing hands or organizing capacity or experienced skill, but machinery and raw materials and capital.

I believe that our business men, our merchants, our manufacturers, and our capitalists, will have the vision to see that prosperity in one part of the world ministers to prosperity everywhere. That there is in a very true sense a solidarity of interest throughout the world of enterprise, and that our dealings with the countries that have need of our products and our money will teach them to deem us more than ever friends whose necessities we seek in the right way to serve.

Says World Needs American Aid.

Our new merchant ships, which have in some quarters been feared as destructive rivals, may prove helpful rivals, rather, and common servants, very much needed and very welcome. Our great shipyards, new and old, will be so opened to the use of the world that they will prove invaluable serviceable to every maritime people in restoring, much more rapidly than would otherwise have been possible, the tonnage wantonly destroyed in the war.

I have only to suggest that there are many points at which we can facilitate American enterprise in foreign trade by opportune legislation and make it easy for American merchants to go where they will be welcomed as friends rather than as dreaded antagonists. America has a great and honorable service to perform in bringing the commercial and industrial undertakings of the world back to their old scope and swing again, and putting a solid structure of credit under them. All our legislation should be friendly to such plans and purposes.

Urges Reconsideration of Taxes.

The credit and enterprise alike will be quickened by timely and helpful legislation with regard to taxation.
I hope that the Congress will find it possible to undertake an early reconsideration of Federal taxes in order to make our system of taxation more simple and easy of administration and the taxes themselves as little burdensome as they can be made and yet sufficient to support the Government and meet all its obligations.
The figures to which those obligations have arisen are very great indeed, but they are not so great as to make it difficult for the nation to meet them, and meet them perhaps in a single generation, by taxes which will neither crush nor discourage. These are not so great as the immense sums we have had to borrow, added to the immense sums we have had to raise by taxation, would seem to indicate; for a very large proportion of those sums were raised in order that they might be loaned to the governments with which we were associated in the war, and those loans will, of course, constitute assets, not liabilities, and will not have to be taken care of by our taxpayers.

The main thing we shall have to care for is that our taxation shall rest as lightly as possible on the productive resources of the country, that its rates shall be stable, and that it shall be constant in its revenue yielding power. We have found the main sources from which it must be drawn. I take it for granted that its mainstays will henceforth be the income tax, the excess profits tax, and the estate tax. All these can so be adjusted to yield constant and adequate returns, and yet not constitute a too grievous burden on the taxpayers.

A revision of the income tax has already been provided for by the act of 1918, but I think you will find that further changes can be made to advantage both in the rates of the tax and in the method of collection. The excess profits tax need not long be maintained at the rates which were necessary while the enormous expenses of the war had to be borne; but it should be made the basis of a permanent system which will reach unrede profits without discouraging the enterprise and activity of our business men. The tax on inheritance ought, no doubt, to be reconsidered in its relation to the fiscal systems of the several States, but it certainly ought to remain a permanent part of the fiscal system of the Federal Government, also.

Asks Luxury Taxes Be Repealed.

Many of the minor taxes provided for in the revenue legislation of 1917 and 1918, though no doubt made necessary by the pressing necessities of the war time, can hardly find sufficient justification under the easier circumstances of peace and can now happily be got rid of. Among these, I hope you will agree, are the ex-cises upon various manufactures and the taxes upon retail sales. They are unequal in the incidence on different individuals. Their collection is difficult and expensive. Those which are levied upon articles sold at retail are largely evaded by the readjustment of retail prices.

On the other hand, I should assume that it is expedient to maintain a considerable range of indirect taxes, and the fact that alcoholic liquors will presently no longer afford a source of revenue by taxation makes it the more necessary that the field should be carefully restudied in order that equivalent sources of revenue may be found which it will be legitimate, and not burdensome, to draw upon. But you have at hand in the Treasury Department many experts who can advise you upon the matters much better than I can. I can only suggest the lines of a permanent and workable system, and the placing of the taxes where they will least hamper the life of the people.

There is, fortunately, no occasion for undertaking in the immediate future any general revision of our system of import duties. No serious danger of foreign competition now threatens American industries. Our country has emerged from the war less disturbed and less weakened than any of the European countries which are our competitors in manufacture. Their industrial establishments have been subjected to greater strain than ours, their labor force to a more serious disorganization, and this is clearly not the time to seek an organized advantage.

The work of mere reconstruction will, I am afraid, tax the capacity and the resources of their people for years to come. So far from there being any danger or need of accentuated foreign competition, it is likely that the conditions of the next few years will greatly facilitate the marketing of American manufactures abroad. Least of all should we depart from the policy adopted in the Tariff act of 1913 of permitting the free entry into the United States of the raw materials needed to supplement and enrich our own abundant supplies.

Wants Dye Industry Protected.

Nevertheless, there are parts of our tariff system which need prompt attention. The experiences of the war have made it plain that in some cases too great reliance on foreign supply is dangerous, and that in determining certain parts of our tariff policy domestic considerations must be borne in mind which are political as well as economic. Among the industries to which special consideration should be given is that of the manufacture of dyestuffs and related chemicals. Our complete dependence upon German supplies before the war made the interruption of trade a cause of exceptional economic disturbance. The close relation between the manufacture of dyestuffs on the one hand and of explosives and poisonous gases on the other, moreover, has given the industry an exceptional significance and value.

Although the United States will gladly and unhesitatingly join in the program of international disarmament, it will, nevertheless, be a policy of obvious prudence to make certain of the successful maintenance of many strong and well equipped chemical plants. German chemical industry, with which we will be brought into competition, was and may well be again a thoroughly knit monopoly, capable of exercising a competition of a peculiarly insidious and dangerous kind.

The United States should, moreover, have the means of properly protecting itself whenever our trade is discriminated against by foreign nations, in order that we may be assured of that equality of treatment which we hope to accord and to premote the world over. Our tariff laws as they now stand provide no weapon of retaliation in case other governments should enact legislation unequal in its bearing on our products as compared with the products of other countries. Though we are as far as possible from desiring to enter upon any course of retaliation, we must frankly face the fact that hostile legislation by other nations is not beyond the range of possibility and that it may have to be met by counter legislation.

This subject has fortunately been exhaustively investigated by the United States Tariff Commission. A recent report of that Commission has shown very clearly what we lack and that we ought to have the instruments necessary for the assurance of equal and equitable treatment. The attention of the Congress has been called to this matter on past occasions, and the past measures which are now recommended by the Tariff Commission are substantially the same that have been suggested by previous administrations. I recommend that this phase of the tariff question receive the early attention of the Congress.

Wants Woman Suffrage Passed.

Will you not permit me, turning from these matters, to speak once more and very earnestly of the proposed amendment to the Constitution which would extend the suffrage to women and which passed the House of Representatives at the last session of the Congress? It seems to me that every consideration of justice and of public advantage calls for the immediate adoption of that amendment and its submission forthwith to the Legislatures of the several States.

Throughout all the world this long delayed extension of the suffrage is looked for; in the United States longer, I believe, than anywhere else.
The necessity for it, and the immense advantage of it to the national life, has been urged and debated, by women and men who saw the need for it and urged the policy of it when it required steadfast courage to be so much beforehand with the common conviction; and I, for one, covet for our country the distinction of being among the first to act in a great reform.

Return Railroads to Owners.

The telegraph and telephone lines will of course be returned to their owners so soon as the transfer can be effected without administrative confusion, so soon, that is, as the change can be made with least possible inconvenience to the public and to the owners themselves. The railroads will be handed over to their owners at the end of the calendar year; if I were in immediate contact with the administrative questions which must govern the retransfer of the telegraph and telephone lines, I could name the exact date for their return also.

Until I am in direct contact with the practical questions involved I can only suggest that in the case of the telegraphs and telephones as in the case of the railways, it is clearly desirable in the public interest that some legislation should be considered which may tend to make of these indispensable instrumentalities of our modern life a uniform and coordinated system which will afford those who use them as complete and certain means of communication with all parts of the country as has so long been afforded by the postal system of the government, and at rates as uniform and intelligible. Expert advice is, of course, available in this very practical matter, and the public interest is manifest.

Neither the telegraph nor the telephone service of the country can be said to be in any sense a national system. There are many confusions and inconsistencies of rates. The scientific measures by which communication by such instrumentalities could be rendered more thorough and satisfactory has not been made full use of. An exhaustive study of the whole question of electrical communication and of the means by which the central authority of the nation can be used to unify and improve it, if undertaken by the appropriate committees of the Congress, would certainly result indirectly even if not directly in a great public benefit.

Asks Wines and Beers Be Retained.

The demobilization of the military forces of the country has progressed to such a point that it seems to me entirely safe now to remove the ban upon the manufacture and sale of wines and beers, but I am advised that without further legislation I have no legal authority to remove the present restrictions. I therefore recommend that the act approved November 21, 1918, entitled "An act to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the purpose of the act entitled 'An act to provide further for the national security and defense by stimulating agriculture and facilitating the distribution of agricultural products, and for other purposes'" be amended or repealed in so far as it applies to wines and beers.

I sincerely trust that I shall very soon be at my post in Washington again to report upon the matters which made my presence at the peace table apparently imperative, and to put myself at the service of the Congress in every matter of administration or counsel that may seem to demand executive action or advice.

Catarhal Deafness Cannot Be Cured by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure catarhal deafness, and that is by a constitutional remedy.
Catarhal Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a running ear or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result. Unless the inflammation can be removed and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever. Many cases of deafness are caused by catarh, which is an inflamed condition of the mucous surface. Halls' Catarrh Medicine acts thru the blood on the mucous surfaces of the system.
We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Catarrhal Deafness that cannot be cured by Halls' Catarrh Medicine. Circulate free. All Druggists, Sec.

SHE HAD NO PATIENCE LEFT

Wife's Stock of That Commodity Pretty Well Exhausted in Effort to Reform William.

A Chicago lawyer said at a banquet:
"Let me tell you a temperance story."

"A long, rangy woman said one day to a parson:
"Parson, Bill was drunk again Saturday night."

"But the parson answered in a soothing tone:
"Dear sister, if you would try being patient with William! Patience and forbearance work miracles, and I have faith to believe that in dear Wil-lam's case it would be even so."

"But the long, rangy woman shook her head.

"Looks to me," she said, "as if I'd tried patience and forbearance about long enough. Talkin' of forbearance, don't I go weeks at a time without speakin' to the cuss, no matter what he asks me? Yes, hull weeks, but it don't seem no good. Then, when it comes to patience, why, parson, I've locked him out of the house all night more oftener than I got fingers and toes, and time and again I've sewed him up in a sheet when he was full and walloped him with a rope till I jest fair dropped with tiredness; and I've bolted him in the henhouse three days runnin' in the patient hope he'd sign the pledge, but he wouldn't; and I've doused him all over with cold water on many a freezin' winter's night, and I've had him run in twice, and I've mixed vinegar with his booze so as to make him sick, and then waited with the patience of Job to see if he'd repent when he came round, but, parson, nothin' done no good. No sree, I'll take more than patience and forbearance to straighten that man out."

Who's Who?

In making the interesting portrait collection of Americans earlier than the eighteenth century, recently published by the Boston Athenaeum, the librarian of that oldest history in the New England capital had to take into consideration the tricks that time has a way of playing with the identity of ancient portraits. Several pictures of men and women who lived in the original group of colonies were excluded because it is no longer possible to say with certainty that the names by which they are known are those of the sitters. It is now known to be more than likely, for example, that the English poet, Charles Churchill, was the original of the picture long believed to represent the American soldier of King Philip's war, Col. Benjamin Church. The portrait generally thought to be that of Miles Standish is open to the suspicion of really representing somebody else, and some of the surviving pictures supposed to show the features of Roger Williams have been plausibly identified as the portraits of other persons.

Astronomers Puzzled.

Some astronomers are of the opinion that the moon was once upon a time part of the earth, and that, while the latter was in a plastic state, our satellite was thrown out from it. They point to the Pacific ocean as the gash from which it was rudely rent.

Maybe so. But nobody knows why the surface of the moon, of which we never see much more than half, is covered with so-called "craters" that bear no likeness to anything on the earth. They are bowl-shaped, usually circular, and rimmed by cliffs 5,000 to 10,000 feet high. There are at least 25,000 of them visible to the telescope, the biggest being 800 miles in diameter.

The late Professor Pickering of Harvard was convinced that the moon has a little moon of its own, a few hundred yards in diameter, which can be seen only when the earth passes between the sun and the lunar orb, throwing the latter into its shadow.—

NOT HER SOLDIER HUSBAND

Lonely Widow Made Application and Government Employment Bureau
Did the Rest.

There's a job for the returned soldier which few of us thought of, the job of being a husband. At least, we never thought of it as one of those jobs which could be listed among the "help wanted." This is what happened at one of the New York city United States employment bureaus.

Gordon Sawyer, the government employment agent picked a pink, lilac-scented letter off the top of his mail.
He opened it and read:

"My husband died some time ago.
I have a small income, a town home and a country place but I am lonesome. Having read that so many soldiers are out of work, I have concluded that there would be nothing better for me to do than to take for my husband a man who has fought for his country. Can you send a worthy soldier to me?"

"This may be a joke," said Mr.
Sawyer. "It sounds too good to be true. But it is worth a trial."

Ten minutes later a goodlooking young soldier walked into the office.
"I am looking for a job," he said.
"I'm a carpenter."

"Married?" asked Mr. Sawyer.

"No, sir," replied Private J.

"Read this letter, investigate the job and report to me."

Just as Mr. Sawyer was closing his office the telephone rang. "This is Private J.," said the voice. "Thanks for that letter. I got the job."

TURNED VESSEL INTO SHOP

Ingenious Idea Appreciated by the Sailors of the British Grand Fleet Stationed at Scapa Flow.

One of the secrets of the war was revealed recently when a party went down to the Victoria docks, London, to inspect the Wilson liner Borodino. This ship was chartered in the early days of the war by the Junior Army and Navy Stores for the purpose of supplying the sailors of the grand fleet with comforts and luxuries that they would otherwise have had to do without. One of the sea lords at the beginning of the war, when the grand fleet was keeping its vigil in Scapa flow, recognized that the officers and men need something to relieve the dullness of existence while waiting for the German fleet to come out.

The suggestion was adopted and the Borodino turned into a most effective shop. Almost anything could be bought on board, while there was a fine laundry with a weekly collection of laundry, and a barber's shop. Five or six dollars a week was taken by the sale of goods, including penny bats of chocolate, greatly favored by young midshipmen. The latest in fancy soaps, shaving creams, new books, the finest chocolates, and an abundance of fresh meat, fish and vegetables helped to make life more bearable in the cold and dismal surroundings of Scapa.

An Enlightened Age.

One day recently a young couple entered the county clerk's office in Winchester and got a marriage license, each giving their age as twenty-five years. The couple, being acquainted with the county recorder, called on him at his office and during their conversation informed him that they had just been married. The recorder, seeing the envelope in the young man's pocket, which he recognized as coming from the clerk's office, asked:
"Who married you?" "Why, the man in the office at the other end of the hall," replied the young man, "and here is our certificate," producing the marriage license. The recorder informed the couple that they were not married, and at their request called a justice of the peace, who performed the ceremony for them.—New York Times.

Extinct Species.

Two grizzly bear skulls from the foothills of San Jose (California) county have been classified at the Smithsonian institution at Washington showing that in days gone by a now extinct species of grizzly roamed the hills of Alum Rock and Mount Hamilton ranges, according to announcement there.

Dr. C. Hart Merriam of the institution came here for the skulls of the bears, which were killed more than fifty years ago by Clark Hubbard, a pioneer. According to Doctor Merriam the skulls are from a species clearly distinct from the 38 other species and subspecies classified by the institution. Doctor Merriam has searched the mountains of the entire West for grizzly bear relics.

"Chromoklipps."

Edward H. Hewitt of New York is a man of science who also owns a large estate in New Jersey, where he carries on interesting experiments.
The Little Journal recounts that several years ago a great lawn fete on his place was one of the leading social events of the season, and he added to the gala aspect of the occasion by dipping the wings of his White Leghorn fowls into red, blue, yellow and green dye solutions. They made a great sensation.

He said they were Tasmanian Chromoklipps and intimated something about $50 a dozen for their eggs. Soon he received inquiries for settings with checks inclosed, and it was only when these were returned and the method of "raising" Tasmanian Chromoklipps was explained that would-be purchasers gave up their quest.

Bodouin Bards.

The descriptive power and fidelity of Arabic poetry in setting forth both the life of the people and the scenery of the clime are remarkable. It conjures up visions of tawny brows, flowing beards, soft eyes, picturesque turbans, pawing chargers, and patient dromedaries. We seem to be there.
It is the land of the date tree and the fountain, the ostrich and the giraffe, the tent and the caravan. It is the home of the simoon and the mirage. It is the world of the desert and the stars. Hospitality waves her torch through the night to win the wanderer to be a guest. The very picture, embodiment, breath, blaze, of all this is in the lyrics of the Bodouin bards. The richness of their language, and something of the character of the people who use it, are shown in the fact that it has 80 names for honey, 500 for the lion, and a thousand for the sword.—William Russell Alger.

Take No Chances.

The following interesting bit of information is from Safety Engineering:
"Not every one understands how inflammable and explosive chlorate of potash is. One man learned in a peculiar manner. He was carrying chlorate of potash tablets in a small bottle in his coat pocket; the cork presumably became loosened and fell out. Entering a street car, he knocked the ashes from his pipe, as he supposed, and put it in his pocket. In a few moments there were spurts of blue flame, and the tablets 'went off.'
For a time the man was in danger of being mistaken for an enemy alien, carrying bombs. The mystery of the explosion was solved by finding small particles of glass wedged in the clothing around where the bottle had been.
Other than the shock to his own nerves and those of the passengers, the only damage was to his clothes, which were burned badly."

Americans Rear New Town.

A number of views of the up-to-date village, built by the American Red Cross near Pisa, Italy, are shown in Popular Mechanics Magazine. The village has been built to provide homes for artisans and their families who fled from Venice during the war and since have not been in a position to return. The village will accommodate 2,000 persons.

"You are suffering from brain lag

"You should take more interest in

"I would like to," replied the patient.
"Then why don't you?" demanded

A Matter of Thousands

By H. B. SEARLE

(Copyright, 1924, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate)

"It's queer, Card, what false impressions girls can make on us nuts!" Gene Terrill, who was playing at law until he had opportunity, as his friends surmised, to set himself up by marrying money, had dropped in this noon, when old Ware, who detested him, was out, for a chat with the junior partner of the real estate firm of Ware & Yantis.

"Who's been doing you, now?" Yantis smiled.

"Nobody!" Gene's engaging laugh rang out. "I was thinking of your peach of a bookkeeper. Looks a good, unselfish sort, too, eh? Well—mother's cook's daughter lives next door to them, and she says that Shade girl spends every penny she earns or can rake and scrape together on clothes, and makes her mother keep boarders for her living."

"Mrs. Shade wants to sell the big house, but the girl won't have it until she catches some fellow that won't make her work. The old lady isn't strong, but she does the work for all that houseful, and the daughter never helps any. But she's pretty enough to do as she pleases." Gene laughed easily, "and I'm not letting her selfishness stand in the way of my being half-way in love!"

Gene had a streak of the knife in him and Yantis knew it, but his remarks, made so carelessly and naturally, somehow this time carried the conviction of truth.

The year before Hollister Shade had come to Bromley and installed his family in the handsome old McCord place. Then he had died very suddenly and when his affairs were settled his widow and daughter had found the big house was all that was left to them. Then Holly, the daughter, had secured employment with the Ware-Yantis firm and her mother had filled the house with boarders.

When Holly came back to the office from her lunch, her soft cheeks glowing, her hands full of yellow daffodils that she knew the junior partner loved of all flowers, Yantis rose courteously to open the door for her, but the special smile for her that for a month had been in his gray-blue eyes was gone.

That evening Terrill managed to overhear the girl and walk with her on her way home. Before they reached her mother's gate the wondering hurt in her eyes had partly disappeared and she asked him in with a semblance of cheerfulness.

"Terry, you've made a fair start," congratulated herself. "Cord won't pay her any more attention if he once gets it in his head that she's as rottenly selfish as her mother. Her out-and-if he lets her alone I fancy I can get her heart turned in my direction and the ceremony safely over before that occurs."

"That" meant an old man's death. It had been a month since Terrill had saved Josiah Bennett, old and feeble, from the onslaught of a reckless chauffeur in a city half-dark journey from Bromley. Terrill had given the old gentleman his name and address, but the incident had almost passed out of his mind, until a few days before when Barnett had sent for him.

"I've got just one living relative," he told Terrill. "Her father, my cousin, died a year or so ago. I can't remember where, but I want you to hunt up the daughter. I can't live more than three months, the doctors say, and though I never saw the girl, she'd just as well have the forty thousand I've got to leave as anybody else. I've made my will, and if you don't find her before I'm gone, keep up the search at least until you do!"

All the way home that evening the click of the talons sung in Terrill's ears. "I have forgotten my property to my cousin Holly Shade!"

Ware's wondering consternation, irritable.

To add to the anguish of believing the girl he still loved, heartless and unworthy, Yantis came to realize that Terrill intended to marry her. He wondered amid his pain, Gene was not a man who would marry a poor girl.

Then, late in April, Charlotte Dentler, seventeen years old and plain and reputed heiress to $60,000, came to visit her cousin, Mrs. Theodore Olevant.

Holly did not think it was necessary for Gene to go autoring every morning and every evening with the homely Charlotte, but somehow she did not care. She had not cared very much for anything all spring. She had given a listless consent when Gene had asked her, with fervent protestations of love, to marry him, but she had not been moved.

"It does not matter," she told him when he asked her to keep the engagement a secret. Nothing mattered!

One sultry evening, near the end of the third week of Charlotte's visit, Yantis moodily strolling in the town's park came suddenly upon a couple of young people sitting on the soft turf in a secluded corner. They did not see him, and he was backing softly away when he heard Gene Terrill's persuasive voice.

"You're sure you're going to run away and marry me tomorrow evening, Charlotte dear? You'll not fail me, sweetheart?"

"Oh, I'll not fail you, Gene darling!" the girl answered.

Yantis caught his breath. Had Gene been playing fast and loose with Holly? It was Yantis' evening for hearing conversations not meant for him. As his steps took him unconsciously toward the old McCord place, and he slowly passed the high privet hedge, voices came softly to him from a rustic bench beside the hedge.

"Oh, mother darling," the voice that two months back he had thought the sweetest in the world, was saying, "it worries me so your always being so tired! It's cooking for those dreadful boarders! Can't we give them up and give up the big house? We could make out on my salary."

"The boarders pay, Holly. I want to put by some for father's stone, and I—I can't bear to sell the house in which he lived last, dear."

"I know, darling, but it breaks my heart to see you working so hard."

"When you are married to Gene, dear, things will be lighter," the older woman answered soothingly. "Both of you can stay with me then, and I won't try to keep boarders. I'd rather send the announcement of your engagement to the papers, tomorrow, don't you think, dear?"

Yantis walked on silently. "I'd rather like to have that lie here in my hands one minute," he thought angrily.

Next morning on the corridor floor by his office door Yantis found a thick white envelope. It was addressed to the society editor of the town's paper and contained an announcement of the engagement of Holly Shade to Eugene Terrill. Mrs. Shade's name was in the upper left-hand corner, but the envelope was not sealed. Evidently Holly had brought it to the office to mail.

The next day the papers told of the runaway marriage of Charlotte Dentler and Eugene Terrill. At noon Yantis came to Holly with a thick white envelope.

"Forgive me," he said, "I forgot to send out the mail yesterday afternoon. I hope it won't inconvenience you?"

Holly seized the envelope and the intuitive knowledge that he had kept it back to save her mortification came to her.

Her answer was an indistinct murmur, but the red blood flooded her face and the eyes she raised to Yantis' were full of an indescribable relief and thankfulness.

In the late afternoon, at the exact moment that Mrs. Theodore Olevant was telling Gene Terrill's mother, with a degree of malicious satisfaction, that it was a mistake about Charlotte's fortune—it was her stepmother who was the heiress—Cardwell Yantis was speaking to Holly, putting on her hat in the cloakroom.

"I'd like to walk home with you this evening if you'll let me," he was saying. "I've something I'd like to tell you."

She looked up at him and her heart gave a great leap. The old smile was in her eyes.

Two Maximilians.

Maximilian, the brother of Franz Joseph, was the most famous Maximilian. At the instance of Napoleon III he was offered the crown of Mexico. He accepted the offer and landed at Vera Cruz on May 28, 1864. Another Maximilian was Robespierre, the most famous and famous of the republican leaders of the French Revolution. Before the Revolution Robespierre had gained distinction as an advocate, but he had to struggle with poverty. At the beginning of the Revolution he was one of the members of the Jacobin club which was composed of blood-thirsty revolutionists.

Social Readjustments.

A young man called on his father in the city jail Sunday evening, the Wichita Eagle says, on a very important mission. When he faced his father with only the iron bars between them he said, "Dad, gimme them shoes. I got a dat." The father, who had been arrested for drunkenness, removed his shoes and handed them through to the boy who in turn removed his work shoes and gave them to the prisoner. The boy's evidently had been wearing the father's Sunday shoes when he was taken on his spree.—Kansas City Star.

Great Record for County.

Dr. F. H. Markley in making his final report as Adams County's Food Administrator makes public some interesting facts. Two merchants were fined $25 during the regime of the Food Administrator, one for selling flour without substitutes and the other for having a larger quantity than allowed and three individuals were penalized for purchasing more sugar than they were entitled to have. All fines were given to the Red Cross.

Over 500 investigations were made as the results of rumors that certain individuals were hoarding sugar but in very few instances were the reports true. A million and a half sugar certificates were used and one thousand certificates to secure sugar to make apple butter.

Dr. Markley sums up part of his work in high praise of the people of the county as follows: "People of Adams county, as a whole, lived up to the laws of the Food Administration and were willing to sacrifice for the men fighting at the front. Their record of reducing flour consumption sixty-three per cent was the most splendid in Pennsylvania with one exception."

Those who aided Dr. Markley were P. F. Smith, McSherrystown; Burton Allen, Littlestown; Wilmer Koser, Biglerville; Frank Blocher, Gettysburg; Charles Zeigler, East Berlin; J. R. Weaver, New Oxford; L. M. Gardner, Jr., York Springs; Jacob Musselman, Fairfield; Arthur Roth, and Misses Lotie and Elsie Little were official clerks of the Administration. William Henning had charge of the bakery organization.

Treaty Will Be Hand-Written.

News dispatches from Paris say that the old tradition that treaties shall be written by hand survives, and that Joseph Cario of the French ministry of foreign affairs, official calligraphist and painter, is writing the new peace treaty.

For about 40 years the post of official illuminator in the French ministry of foreign affairs was held by M. Garopin. He had one love in life—"the pen," to quote his own words, "this simple and marvelous instrument through which human thought is transcribed and forever preserved; one hate—the vulgar and unattractive typewriter, which prints without art pages that time will not respect."

The official calligraphist not only writes treaties and conventions, but also all the official documents conferring orders of decorations on sovereigns, and all the letters which are sent to them and signed either by the president of the republic or ministers.

Pretty Smart Chickens.

A recent morning a Missouri farmer placed three crates of chickens and five bushels of potatoes in his trailer, hitched the trailer to his automobile and started for town. He was almost there when he discovered he had no trailer. He found he had parted company with it a quarter of a mile from home, and when he got back to it the crates were empty and the potatoes frozen.

He presumed, of course, the chickens had been stolen, and was greatly surprised when he went to the hen-house early next day after breakfast to find every one of the chickens there. Not one was missing. They had all returned home, but how they got out of the crates probably will always remain a mystery.

Army Discipline.

The cistern had sprung a leak, and the master plumber and his demobilized men came to investigate, says a writer in London Evening News. The hole was found, and the master said to his man: "Put a patch on here, Jim," indicating the place with his finger. The patch was put on, but the cistern still leaked, and the master found that the patch had been put on at the side of the hole. "I put it just where you pointed, governor," said Jim. "I've been two years in the army, and now I always do exactly as I am told."

United States Tire News.

A resourceful motorist whose car has been stuck in the mud does not always have to fall back on a pair of mules to get free. For such an emergency the United States Tire Company offers some suggestions that have proved valuable. The first calls for having stored away somewhere in the car a stack of old newspapers. When the car gets stuck and the wheels refuse to take hold, feed in some of the old papers between the tires and the mud. Usually only a few will have to be worked in before the wheels begin to grip and the car start forward. This method of handling a difficult situation is so simple and so uniformly successful, that every motorist should know of it and carry a pile of old newspapers, unless he is equipped with some other apparatus for such a contingency.

Here is the other method suggested by the United States Tire Company: Put the car in low, and if you cannot feed the gas with your foot evenly, so that the wheels will brake slowly, put your emergency brake on. Do not put it on so that the wheels will not revolve at all, but tightly enough to keep them from revolving rapidly. With the wheels turning slowly, the maximum pull is delivered to them by having the car in low gear, and so long as they turn slowly they can get the benefit of the tremendous power.

It is not always wise to fill the hole with stones or bricks, for their rough edges are hard on tires. Small branches of trees are better, as they offer much better traction space. Should this method fail, quite often a slight push that would not much more than move a baby buggy will furnish just the added amount of power necessary to get the car going.
